GATHERING OF BRAVES

And I say without fear of contradiction that you can safely ally yourselves to that party and feel in that party you will have good government and enduring peace. And now let us speak of these differences between the Republican party and the Democratic party. The old Federalist party was the party out of which grew the present Republican party. It was the party of Alexander Hamilton, whom we all know, so history tells us, was an aristocrat, and I don't use the word aristocrat in any slurring sense. I speak of him as a man who believed in the system of government in which the supposed leaders of the people should be the rulers; leaders in wealth, leaders in intelligence, and leaders in social rank. These should be, he considered, the leaders of those who mark the way for the progress of the race and the government of the people. So he was called an aristocrat, and the Federalist party was the one he represented and led.

The Party of Jefferson. And I say without fear of contradiction

The Party of Jefferson.

Opposed to him was the party of Jef-ferson, who believed in the government of the country by the governed themselves-of the people, by the people and for the people. So you see very clearly we belong, and when the leaders Iail to recognize the principles of Jefferson, then they step out of the Democratic party, and are no longer Democrats. The Democratic party marches on irrespective of the men who claim to be their leaders.

I don't know just how much people in this country have learned in a general way of the two parties. In the States clearly there is a line of demarkation recognized by all Democrats, which is this: The Democratic party is a party to govern by the common people, while the Republican party wants a party of the Republican party wants a party of aristocrats, and is fast becoming the party of the plutocrats. In other words, gentlemen, the days of Alexander Hamilton have passed forever from the polititon have passed forever from the political atmosphere of the United States, and today there has sprung up something new. It is a government now of the people by the financiers, by the plutocrats, by the men who have the money, and, you may say what you will, it still stands out clearly and distinctly that the Democratic party represents the common people, and the Republican party the people with the money.

Laboring Man's Good.

You may not know the danger of trust-You may not know the danger of trusting to the men who are fast becoming princes—monied princes—the government of a great people. But that danger you will know and learn as you learn more of national politics. If you will think for a moment of the stupendous wealth and power that lies in the control in the monied people of the United States, you will see more readily how States, you will see more readily how easy it is for the man that controls the money to control the government. All manner of ways have been manufactured and devised and thought of to be cloud the middle classes—the common people—so that they may think that to more particularly to hear, as others of people—so that they may think that to make rich the rich man is for their benefit, and that therefore their votes manner of contrivances have been in-vented to shift the ssue in the hope that the people would be blinded. The workingman has been time and again fooled into casting his vote on the tariff question. It has been argued to him that if the manufacturer prospers he will find work, and therefore he must also prosper, but if you beat down the manufacturers then the laboring man must fall too. On its face it is a placifible ar-

Republican Tariff.

But look at it a little deeper. The tar-iff to be protected has been the battle-cry of the Republicans for years. A tar-iff, in their words, is to place on articles manufactured in the United States prices so high that the manufacturer can compete successfully with all other can compete successfully with all other countries, and therefore drive out all competition in them, and keep prices higher all over the United States. Of course, if prices are higher the laboring man must pay higher prices for what he buys. The laboring man's capital is not protected. The laboring man has to compete the competition of the laboring man has to compete the competition. protected. The laboring man has to compete with the labor market of the world, and now the scum labor of Europe is in the United States today. There is no prothe United States today. There is no protective tariff to protect the American workingman. He is competing with the lower classes of Europe, who are paid impoverishing prices. The manufacturer of the United States is growing more wealthy day by day. The fault is thus: wealthy day by day. The fault is this:
The Republican party fails to appreciate the meaning of business men. They think the business man is a man who owns a mill or a bank or speculates in stocks in Wall street, and when they have run through that list of occupations, they think they have exhausted the catalogue. They forget that the man who goes into the mountains and digs for ore is just as much a business man. The man who goes behind his plow from early morn till night is just as much a business man as he who takes the products of that plowing and speculates with it in Wall street. They have narrowed the term business man to suit themselves. We have the idea that the term takes in the beautiful of the service of the serv takes in the brawn and muscle of men as well as capital, for the capital of the workingman is his muscle. He makes He makes more from that than he spends. That is his best asset, and yet the very bone and sinew of the American workingman to-day is unprotected, and he is fooled in the belief that in the sale of the machin-ery of the manufacturer he, too, is pro-tected.

Democrats Frightened.

I have read in the papers here a great deal about what the Republican party has done for this country. I want to say now that I came to this country before now that I came to this country before anrexation, and had occasion to know somewhat of the feeling with which some of the principal men of the Democratic party looked upon the annexation question. I say I am free to admit that they did not take to the idea, but I am they did not take to the idea, but I am sure, gentiemen, that you will understand it was a matter of principle with them. A party that was founded by the man who drew up the Declaration of Independence is a party which conceived that the underlying principle of union was the formation which contemplated a union of States that extended from ocean to ocean, and they looked upon the annexation of foreign countries as some-thing outside their principles and a new departure for the American people to make. So it frightened them. That, howmake. So it frightened them. That, how-ever, has been accomplished. I want to say here and now that I challenge any one to contradict the statement now that that has been accomplished—I say the Democrats in Congress voted to give man-hood suffrage here. I challenge you to point out one Democrat to me who voted against giving citizenship to this counagainst giving citizenship to this country, and I will point out to you a dozen Republicans who voted against the interests of this country.

I am not here as a bigot, to say that there is no good in the Republican party. There must be good in both parties. The Republican party is a party that is good for some classes of people and the Democratic party is good for other classes. I want to ask you to put the question fair. want to ask you to put the question fair-ly to yourselves, "With which party will I ally myself?" You have got to stand

Good Republicans.

There are just as good men in the Republican party as there are in the Demo-eratic party. Our choice between the two parties should be open and free. We are all Americans tonight. I don't know for the people. So you see very clearly demarked the two first great parties that formed in the United States of America. The old Federalist party died, and its successor of today, in my judgment, is the Republican party; while the Democratic party lives up to the principles which were laid out by Thomas Jefferson, and which are the principles under which and which are the principles under which we are living today.

We have no masters, for we follow only the principles of the party to which we belong, and when the leaders fail to recognize the principles of lefferson. such people who are and have been at Washington trying to rob the Hawalian of his franchise. We are all born free. I am born free, and as a free man I recognize the announcement that is made in the Declaration of Independence that every man is born free and equal. When I knew that efforts were being made in Washington to put a rider on the liberties of the Hawaiians, that was enough for me to hold aloof from the Republican party. Gentlemen, I believe I have told you the sentiments of the Hawaii-ans. They are holding aloof yet. But tonight I believe I am safe in saying that the Hawaiians are Democrats. that the Hawaiians are Democrats. I am going to follow the people. I did believe, like the kings of the past, when the United States stepped out of the course pursued by Cleveland that it was making a mistake. I am going to follow the voice of the people. Caesar intended to do the same, but later became an imperialist. I am not going to follow his example, but I am going to play the Brutus on him.

F. J. Testa was excused from speaking after being urged several times. He said he had not come to speak but to listen and make up his mind for him-

Kaulia a Mugwump.

J. K. Kaulia took the platform, and interpreted into English by John E. Bush, his speech was as follows:

what was said, but nobody explained it to me in Hawaiian. In the Republican meeting there was a great deal of talking done, but no interpretation of it so that the Hawaiians could understand The best speech made here tonight was lost on us Hawaiians, as it was not interpreted. We are all under one flag and trying to work harmoniously for the good of the government. It ought to be understood there is a class which does not understand the English language, and we ought to give them an idea of what the political parties are. There is as yet no way of letting them know from which party to choose. On belief of that the party to choose. On behalf of that class of Hawaiians-that class which has heretofore been called the Royalists-I must say I am not able to choose my party. If I am to choose today I must be called an independent, or a mugwump. With this remark I intend to close my talk. I will say to you the time is coming when there will be a development which the natives will be able to understand, and in due time they will be able to make their selection of one party or the other.

Marshall to the Front. Cries of "Marshall! Volcano Marshall!" arose from many parts of the hall. The editor of the extinct "Volcano"-unlike the former crater-was smoking. Marshall was away back by the rear windows, and slowly came to the front. He was calm, and puffed at his Manila as he talked. His speech was punctuated by vociferous applause from some and cat-calls from others. Marshall was undaunted. He uttered a steady, drawling stream of polysyllables. The audience objected to his enjoyment of his cigar, and shouted to him to "throw it away."

Marshall said he would. He, however, showed a more economic spirit and deposited the cigar on the stage for future reference. Marshall's speech until it was interrupted was as follows:

Mr. President and Gentlemen: I have been voting the Democratic ticket for twenty-one years, but tonight I have learned more about the fundamental principles of Democracy and of the fundamental principles of Republicanism than I ever knew before. Mr. President, what constitutes the badge of Democracy in these Islands? In 1896 I had the pleasure which was denied to many of you, of voting for that elegent charming of of voting for that eloquent champion of the people, William Jennings Bryan, Mr. President, I am an American. Marshall wandered about in a sea of verbiage for some minutes amid cries of "Sit down. Take a chair." He refused all these suggestions and insisted on continuing. McCarthy replied that the point was well taken, and requested Mr. Marshall to sit down. Marshall, however, made another attempt to speak, but this time he was compelled to listen to the rising anger and jeers of the crowd, and after a few more rambling statements, he slowly composed himself into a chair in the front row.

While the arguments over the matter were going on, Charles L. Rhodes extinguished the "Volcano" editor by offering the resolution given in the third paragraph of this article. The resolution was hastily adopted and it being an opportune moment for adjournment. further trouble was precluded by the Democrats departing.
